Former Magistrate James E. Romig, confidential adviser to Mrs. Bergioti, mother of the escaped convict, discredits the theory of the Department of Justice men. Judge Romig was in the house when Bergdoll escaped, and gave the alarm, notifying D. Clarence Gibboney, Bergdoll's atterney, in whose care the prisoner was supposed to be during his stay here.

Romig Discredits Theory "I was in the theater party Thursday night," said Romig. "We all went to thetheater-Grover, sis two guards

"Stecher drove the car part of the way and Grover also drove some distance. I left them before we got back to the Bergdoll residence. But from 9 o'clock the next morning until he went away I was with him and the guards in the house. I want to say emphatically that he was in the house until about five minutes of 3."

According to Federal agents, the escape was effected some time before the time mentioned. Reports have reached H. B. Pierce, head of the lecal division of the Department of Justice, and William B. Mills, Superintendent or Police, who is cooperating with the military intelligence officers in an attempt to capture the missing prisoner, that Bergdoll was at large long before the time he was reported missing by Mr. Gibboney.

There is some division of opinion among the government agents of the average temperature is 32 degrees Kahrenheit. There is no liquor available to heat the body, and one has to be content to fire up on fats and oils.

Even the whale and the walrus have given the island the go-by, and the reindeer, sent there against their bidding in 1770, are rapidly becoming extinct.

Dry America, he said, had nothing on the dark and cheerless little passession of Denmark.

Princess Fignatelli also was a passession of capture the missing prisoner, that Bergdoll was at large long before the time he was reported missing by Mr. Gibboney.

There is some division of opinion smong the government agents and the military intelligence men who interviewed the two guards shortly after the escape as to whether the men were drunk. It was admitted at the Department of Justice office that not all the agents who talked to the guards are convinced that they were drunk. Judge Romig and the two guards themselves sidmit that they had a little liquor in the house, but all three deny they were intoxicated.

Chauffeur's Wife Denies Plot

Mrs. Stecher said that to the best of her knowledge there was no prestranged plan between her husband and Bergdoll. Stecher did not seem to be worried hor to appear as though there was a cloud on his mind throughout the week, and the testimony of neighbors bore this out.

One feature of the affair is that Stecher and Bergdoll look something alike.

Mrs. Stecher is very much upset about her husband's participation in Grover's latest escapade, according to neighbors. She did not know of his connection with the affair until Saturday night, when she came into Philadelphia. Here she heard a newsboy crying, "All about Bergdoll," and, buying a paper, she found that her husband was supposed to have fled with the convict. She collapsed on the spot.

The two non-commissioned officers who accompanied Grover Cleveland Bergdoll to dig $150,000 out of the Maryland hills were still confined to their quarters at Castle Williams. Forting the investigation of his disapparance.

Daylight Saving Fails

Lalend Entirely Dry

A sorrowful tale of Iceland was unfolded yesterday by Edward J. Curry, a British manufacturer, who arrived from Rotterdam on the Holland-America liner Nieuw Amsterdam. He said he spent a year in Reykjavik, the capital, and it seemed like ten.

The Icelanders, he said never had heard of daylight saving and didn't care much about the idea when told of it. When he left, Mr. Curry said, it was dark at 4 p. m. There were only two motion picture Rouses in the city, and these, he said, were showing reels of Charlie Chaplin and other stars in their first pictures.

There are about 85,000 persons on the island, and he said he was at a loss to know why they stayed there, if celand is just outside the polar zone, and the average temperature is 32 degrees Rahrenheit. There is no liquor available to heat the body, and one has to be content to fire up on fats and doils.
